

Alternative Medicine for Pet Intestinal Worms

By Bruce Maul

Publication date: June 3, 2008

Source Link - http://EzineArticles.com/?expert=Bruce\_Maul <http://EzineArticles.com/?Alternative-Medicine-For-Pet-Intestinal-Worms&id=1208484>

One of the typical diseases to inflict household pets includes the infestation of the digestive tract by intestinal and other parasitic worms. Intestinal parasitism is likely a tricky disorder considering that no physical symptoms would indicate the intrusion of parasitic worms such as the hookworm, roundworm and whipworm. Nonetheless, if a cat or dog suffers from chronic diarrhea or is unusually sluggish despite the regular feeding of nutritious meals-while sporting a dull mane or a swollen belly, then this might just be a signal of worm infestation.

A feline or canine de-wormer constituted by anthelmintic compounds will most likely be prescribed by your veterinarian. While chemical-based treatments may be considered as effective de-wormers, veterinary drugs singly operate to neutralize the parasites lurking in your pet's digestive tract. This method of treatment is deficient when related to the principles of holistic health care. Know that holistic approaches serve as the central paradigm in the manufacture of standardized pet herbal supplements that have now been distributed in the mainstream, following prior endorsement with the FDA.

The practice of holistic medicine has so far extended its scope to redefine the contemporary methods of veterinary health care. From the conventional and symptomatic treatment of pet diseases, the holistic philosophy steps up to the healing of your pet's entire being which involves the aggregate treatment of corporeal and mental components that may actually be jointly responsible for the manifest of a disease. Thus in the uptake of a holistic medication for pet intestinal worms, the classic de-wormer would not suffice. In fact, related holistic treatments are designed to enhance the functions of the digestive system while regulating the healthy balance of intestinal flora. Moreover, holistic approaches endeavor only the use of natural constituents such as herbal extracts and homeopathic ingredients. In retrospect, alternative medicine likely becomes the springboard to this endeavor given the wide portfolio of herbs utilized in its practice. The herbs Wormwood and Herb of Grace are regarded for their enhancing benefits on the digestive tract while Cloves constitute of natural detoxifying compounds. Meanwhile, the extracts of the Neem Tree are known to be worm resistant and would likely support the intent of de-worming.

Concentrated compounds occurring with the abovementioned herbs now find its way into pet herbal supplement formulas such as <http://www.myherbalremedystore.com/ppar001.html> Parasite Doctor, which provides pet owners an alternative medicine for pet intestinal worms. On the forefront of its production are holistic practitioners, who are recognized experts in the practice of both alternative and veterinary medicine. Using modern extraction and pharmaceutical methods, medicinal compounds are consequently integrated to produce a therapeutic and holistic herbal supplement formula. In the end, holistic methods become the precursor to sprightly, healthy pets and satisfied pet owners as well!

Bruce Maul is a partner in Gold Flax Seed, Inc. which provides only top quality Flax Seed, Herbal Remedies and other health related products. Learn more about Herbal Remedies by visiting <http://www.myherbalremedystore.com>

Alternative Medicine for Pet Intestinal Worms

Brought to you by "The Naturally Healthy Pet"

---

Article Source: http://EzineArticles.com/?expert=Bruce\_Maul <http://EzineArticles.com/?Alternative-Medicine-For-Pet-Intestinal-Worms&id=1208484>

While chemical-based treatments may be considered as effective de-wormers, veterinary drugs singly operate to neutralize the parasites lurking in your pet's digestive tract. This method of treatment is deficient when related to the principles of holistic health care. Know that holistic approaches serve as the central paradigm in the manufacture of standardized pet herbal supplements that are now distributed in the mainstream.